The View From WHAT IS AAADD?

My Window

They say the older you get, the faster time flies. Even though we know that there are still sixty seconds to a minute, sixty minutes to an hour, twenty-four hours to the day, the perception can definitely fool us into thinking that we are living in some kind of time warp and things are progressing a bit faster than in the past. Now that we are almost at the end of May, I realize that it was about this time last year that I was told that I would be transferred to New Milford.

So here we are, steaming toward June and July, and I have been through a whole year of parish life, going from event to event, feast day to feast day. Where has the time gone? As I look back, it seems to almost be a blur- that which was so important on the future calendar now is just a memory, and very often, it seems that we just go from one event to another.

This is all, I think, a microcosm of what our society is like. So many things which seem to be so important to us at the time, fade from our interest so fast. We often wander from one task to another, from one project to another, often feeling unfulfilled and empty.

Sometimes my life seems to be like that- going from one thing to another, doing a lot of things but accomplishing little. That's when I realize that I am afflicted with "AAADD."

What is AAADD? It is "Age Activated Attention Deficit Disorder." I'll give you an example of how it works in my life.

My day starts at 6:30 AM when I get up, shower, get dressed, and go over to the church for morning Mass. After Mass, I like to spend some time in prayer at the church, and then, usually by 9:00 or so, head back to the parish house. I'll make a cup of coffee, have some breakfast, and then head to my office. This is where the AAADD kicks in.

I first check for emails and messages on the phone. I might also check out Facebook, to see what's going on with the rest of my friends. I will put on the news on my computer to see if I've missed any great events that happened overnight. I may check to see if President Trump wrote anything exciting on Twitter.

I begin trying to clean off my desk. I notice a marriage form that I have not completed, so I begin doing that. I open the top drawer of my desk for a pen, and see some keys laying there. I decide to label the keys, so I begin walking around the office, trying out keys. It is then I notice that someone has raised the thermostat in the office, making it unbearably warm. I head to the thermostat, and see that there's some mail which needs to be stamped. Before I get the first piece of mail in the stamp machine, I see some messages in my mail box from the night before. I begin reading these messages when the phone rings. I rush back to my desk to answer the phone when I remember that the Easter Mass schedule is still on the voice mail system. I click on my computer to look up the voice mail prompt, when I notice that I've gotten some emails. I click on the email icon when the mailman comes with a giant pile of mail. I begin sorting the mail when I notice a birthday card I sent has been returned because of a wrong address. I go on the computer again to my label writer program to check on the address. As I am doing this, I see that my label writer has run out of labels. I check my desk drawer for labels, when I see some bills that are long overdue. I pull out the checkbook to pay the bills, when I realize that I have not made a recent deposit to the bank. I go over to the garage and get in my car so I can go to the bank and make the deposits. On my way to the bank, I decide to go through the drive-thru at Dunkin Donuts to get a breakfast sandwich on a croissant. I try eating the sandwich when tons of crumbs tumble down to the floor. I then go over to the car wash to get the car cleaned. As I am entering the car wash, I realize that the inspection is overdo on my car. I come back in the office to book an inspection, when I decide to grab a bottle of water out of the fridge. I open the fridge and see that the water has frozen, so I put the water out on my desk to defrost. I then notice that the marriage form is still laying there. So my desk is still a mess, the marriage form is not completed, the keys have not been labeled, the thermostat is still high, the mail has not been stamped, my messages are still unread, I never answered the phone, the Easter Mass schedule is still on the voice mail system, my emails haven't been answered, the mail has not been sorted, I am still out of labels, the bills have not been paid, the checks have not been deposited, my car hasn't been inspected, and I need a nap. Then I wonder aloud why I've been so busy, why I'm so tired, and nothing ever gets done.

Does your life seem like that, too? Well, I decided to take my time into my own hands. I decided to call a counselor for help. So I sat down at my desk, went to my computer, google searched a counselor in the area. In the middle of my google search, I noticed a marriage license on my desk that needed to be completed. I looked in my desk for a pen....

Love,

Fr. Joe
